Nutrition is really important for maintaining good health because it’s probably the only specific thing we can do as individuals that really makes a difference in our health overall. We may have genetic predispositions to certain diseases. We may live in an environment that is hazardous to our health. But nutrition is something that we have control over. What we chose to put in our mouth, then could make a difference in the quality of our lives.